Moving on from nursery

Deciding which pre-prep or preparatory school is right for your child takes time and careful consideration. There's a lot to think about, starting with what's right for your family in terms of co-educational or single-sex environments and whether you're looking for a day school or a boarding school. Then, even at this stage, it's important to think about your options for senior school as you may need to factor in whether your child will move schools at 11 or 13.

Start your search as early as possible

The sooner you can start your search, the larger the pool of schools you will be able to choose from. That said, don't despair if time is short as our educational consultancy team has a great track record of finding the right school for your child even on tight deadlines.

Matching your child to the right learning environment

Understanding your child's character and nature is vital at this stage. Good tutors and education consultants can support you with this and can help you identify the type of school environment that might suit them best. They're also well-placed to suggest a shortlist of schools that would suit your family and your child. Getting the right school at this age really can help set the stage for your child's later academic success.
